OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. Asian equities recovered in December as markets were less concerned about Omicron's impact on economic recovery despite rising cases globally. Global central banks also turned less accommodative with the exception of China. The US dollar was little changed while the US 10-year treasury yield ended higher. High dividend and value outperformed growth.

Fund Performance. The fund returned 2.45% in December, lagging the benchmark by 190 basis points. On the positive side, stock selection and underweight in consumer discretionary and healthcare contributed the most. On the negative side, stock selection in utilities detracted from performance.

Fund Strategy. 2022 is poised to be different than 2021 in a few key ways: the US Federal Reserve will be tightening monetary policy while China is expected to be more accommodative. Stimulus from China should be supportive of emerging markets. While 2021 saw most investors surprised by higher-than-expected inflation, this year's inflation is expected to peak in the first six months but where it settles is up for debate. The expectation for sustained higher inflation after this year would affect households, central bank policy and asset markets. Additionally, Asian earnings expectations are more modest for 2022 but valuations are starting the year lower than 12 months ago. In the midst of these various market forces, the fund will maintain a diversified positioning in quality franchises, defensives and value cyclical for both income and growth opportunities.
