OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. Asian equities drifted lower in July, as no progress was made in trade talks and elevated Fed expectations were pared and eventually disappointed. 2Q earnings results and economic data were mixed, while U.S. and Chinese hard activity data showed some signs of bottoming in June. Most Asian currencies saw weakness in July, while the USD was up 2.5%, touching a two-year high as the Fed warned against a lengthy easing cycle and defined the current rate cut as a mid-cycle policy adjustment. ASEAN currencies except the Thai Baht were marginally up through the month, while the Korean Won, Australian dollar and Singapore dollar were the worst-performing currencies. Taiwan was the best performing market led by yet again the technology sector, followed by Indonesia and Australia, while Korea, India, Hong Kong and Thailand were the worst-performing countries. By style, price momentum outperformed, while value cyclical underperformed.

Fund Performance. The fund outperformed the benchmark during the month. Stock selection was marginally negative, however country allocation contributed to the relative performance.

Fund Strategy. Global growth remains under pressure, however China and the rest of Asia have been holding up relatively well. This is important in that China policy stimulus has been underwhelming compared with prior episodes, leaving room to support the lingering slowdown, regardless of trade developments. We also take solace in the fact that Asian economies face fewer imbalances now versus previous slowdown episodes. Current account deficits and debt levels have adjusted considerably. Although corporate earnings remain under pressure, they are showing early signs of improvement. Importantly, market expectations for earnings in 2019 are already very low, a low hurdle to beat.

Against such a backdrop, income investing should continue to work as it typically offers better downside protection in uncertain times. There remains ample attractive opportunities across defensives, cyclicals and financials. Our core strategy remains unchanged with a preference for both low beta and value. Low beta stocks have higher earnings and dividend visibility offering better downside protection while value stocks have priced in more uncertainties offering more re-rating potential. The combination of these two factors should allow us to outperform during initial upturn of cycle as well as late to down cycle.
