OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. Asian equities returned flattish in November. While ongoing U.S.-China trade talks, short term stabilization of Chinese economic activity, and accommodative central bank policies supported market sentiment, geopolitical confrontation (especially centered around Hong Kong) continued to bring volatility. Among the major markets, China was the best performer thanks to better-than-expected macro data and monetary policy support. Taiwan continued to do well as technology showed improved end demand. Australia also outperformed driven by growth and defensive stocks. Meanwhile, all ASEAN markets underperformed as results were lackluster. India fell on sluggish demand, but was limited by relief measures from the federal government. Korea fell on the back of heavy outflow and weaker currency. Hong Kong equities rebounded initially but declined later on given the ongoing protests, which affected local economic activity and investment sentiment. Overall, growth index outperformed value index.

Fund Performance. The Fund underperformed the benchmark. On the positive side, exposures in technology and real estate contributed. Technology hardware names all rose along with the broader sector recovery driven by product placements in the 5G rollout and a stronger smartphone cycle. On the negative side, exposures in consumer and communication services hurt.

Fund Strategy. For most of this year, Asian markets have been caught in a tug-of-war between slowing global growth and looser central bank policy. Corporate earnings have been under pressure and a stubbornly strong US dollar has been a headwind. However, in the past 3 months, economic activity indicators have stopped falling. Our view remains that the economy now is better positioned than in 2015, when there were heightened concerns about a global slowdown and hard landing in China. We believe Asian markets will still ‘muddle through’ given expectations for earnings growth have fallen significantly, making a lower hurdle to beat, and valuations remain below average. With the uncertain macro backdrop, defensives and quality franchises will provide downside protection while value cyclicals will give us upside along with macro uplift. Over the month, we took profit in outperforming Chinese toll road operators and reduced other lower conviction names. We added to quality cyclical names with value including Korean tech and Korean/ Indonesian banks.
