OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. The JP Morgan Asia Credit Index (JACI) Philippines declined by 0.01% in September as Philippine dollar-denominated bond yields moved higher by an average of 3 basis points across the curve.

As widely expected, the US Federal Reserve (Fed) raised interest rates by 25-basis points on their September meeting. This marks the Fed's 3rd hike for this year, bringing the Fed funds target rate range to 2-2.25%. The updated Fed dot plot continues to show a median rate of 2.375% for 2018, indicating the possibility of another hike this year. There were no changes to the 2019 and 2020 dot plots with median levels at 3.125% and 3.375% respectively. The newly added 2021 figure is also at 3.375%, while the long run projection moved up to 3%. US Treasury yields rose, with the US 10-year benchmark yield increasing by 10 basis points, closing September at 3.06%. Philippine dollar-denominated asset yields tracked US yields upward for the month.

On the local front, inflation for the month of August surged to a 9-year high of 6.4%. The increase in prices was largely attributable to food and non-alcoholic beverages. Elevated global oil prices likewise drove transport and power prices higher. The BSP Monetary Board meeting held towards month-end concluded with a 50 basis point interest rate hike as expected by the market. This marked the fourth consecutive tightening move amid rising local inflation and a weaker currency. The central bank likewise noted that 2019 inflation could be at risk of breaching the 2-4% targeted range. Monetary authorities will continue to monitor economic data to determine appropriate monetary policy responses moving forward.

Fund Performance. The fund returned -0.02% for the month, underperforming its benchmark by 1 basis point.

Fund Strategy. The Fund will continue to closely track the JPMorgan Asia Credit Total Return Index. Investors in a bond fund must be prepared to withstand volatility as higher investment value is typically achieved over the medium to long term.
