OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. The JP Morgan Chase Asia Total Return Philippines Bond Index (JACI Philippines) lost 1.91% in October as Philippine dollar-denominated bond yields moved higher across the yield curve by an average of 32.6 basis points.

Last October, global bond prices saw declines amid generally strong US economic data which increased expectations for a December Fed hike. Data released earlier during the month showed that US unemployment claims had dropped to the lowest level since April, while indicators for both the manufacturing and services sector beat market expectations. However, the main economic highlight for the period was the US 3Q2016 GDP figure, which grew at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 2.9% compared to the consensus expectation of 2.6%. As a result of these strong economic data points, market players pricing in a December rate hike rose from 61% at the beginning of the month to 71% by end-October. Uncertainty likewise prevailed ahead of the closely contested November US presidential election.

On the local front, Philippine assets were sold down, underperforming regional peers as some investors took the chance to book gains amidst persistent market volatility. Moreover, trade data released during the month indicated that the country's external payments position, though still positive, was no longer as favorable as before. The decline in preference towards Philippine assets also manifested in the currency exchange rate, which depreciated by 20 basis points against the US dollar during the month, following its 3.4% decline in September.

Fund Performance. The fund rose by 0.04% in October, beating the benchmark by 2 basis point. It outperformed the benchmark by 76 basis points, with a return of 0.98%.

Fund Strategy. The fund will maintain its duration of less than 1 and will continuously look into corporate bonds for yield enhancement.
