OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. The JP Morgan Chase Asia Total Return Philippines Bond Index (JACI Philippines) was flat in December. Yields of Philippine dollar denominated bonds increased an average of 2 basis points on muted actions. For the year, JACI Philippines was amongst the best performing indices in the region returning 3.97%.

In a year of extreme volatility, Dollar denominated Bonds issued by the Philippines remained resilient as economic fundamentals coupled with strong investor demand allowed yields to decline by 10 basis points for the year. Global developments took to the forefront for the year, with investors focused on developments in Europe, China and the United States. Europe enacted further monetary stimulus applied thru policy rate cuts as well as quantitative easing (QE) and battled through political brinkmanship in Greece. China, in a period of economic transition, increased monetary stimulus as well, cutting policy rates by 125 basis points and depreciated its currency. The US economy continued to show signs of recovery with improvements in labor markets giving the Federal Reserve enough confidence to hike policy rates.

With the shortened work-month, December centered around the Federal Reserve meeting. The FOMC decided to hike by 25 basis points citing confidence in both the labor market and the inflation trend which would rise to the targeted 2 percent in the medium term. The move was largely expected by the market thus the muted response.

Fund Performance. The fund gained 0.12% in December, outperforming the benchmark by 10 basis points.

Fund Strategy. The fund will maintain its duration of less than 1 and will continue to look for opportunities to diversify into corporate bonds for yield enhancement.
