OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. The JP Morgan Chase Asia Total Return Philippines Bond Index (JACI Philippines) increased by 1.20% this February. Yields of Philippine dollar denominated bonds dropped an average of 2 basis points on actions.

February marks the shift from a risk-off to a risk-on sentiment. Dollar-denominated Bonds issued by the Philippines still remain resilient as economic fundamentals coupled with strong investor demand allowed yields to decline by an average of 34 basis points year-to-date. The Bureau of the Treasury (BTr) held a bond swap for 25-year notes at an issue size of 2 billion dollars; the swap was well received with bonds given at a record low yield of 3.70%.

Despite volatility and fear of global growth slowdown, oil prices started recovering by the middle of February. A production freeze in oil was proposed by major oil producing countries this month. Investors' risk appetite has increased as players feel more secure with the commodities market slowly stabilizing.

This month, multiple dovish statements from various central banks, have boosted sentiment for riskier assets. Statements from officials of the Federal Reserve remained dovish in order to observe the economic effects of the rate hike implemented last year. Markets await the next European Central Board meeting in March as discussions include deflationary fears, additional quantitative easing, and weakness in economic data due to Britain's possible exit from the European Union. Meanwhile, the Bank of Japan surprised markets earlier this month as it implemented a policy rate cut.

Fund Performance. The fund gained 1.18% for the month.

Fund Strategy. The Fund will continue to closely track changes to the JPMorgan Asia Credit Total Return Index. Investors in a bond fund must be prepared to withstand volatility as higher investment value is typically achieved over the medium to long term.
