OUTLOOK AND STRATEGY

Market Review. The JP Morgan Chase Asia Total Return Philippines Bond Index (JACI Philippines) returned 0.33% in August as Philippine dollar-denominated bond yields moved lower across the yield curve by an average of 7.5 basis points.

Last August, global bond prices continued to be volatile as the July nonfarm payrolls figure came in at 255,000, strongly outpacing the consensus estimate of 180,000. This, coupled with hawkish rhetoric from a number of Federal Reserve officials, caused some investors to speculate that a rate hike might occur sooner rather than later. US Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen's speech at the Jackson Hole symposium during the last week of August was also perceived to be hawkish, though she continued to emphasize that monetary policy would be "easy for an extended period of time" and stated that the so-called "Fed dot plot" of projected rate increases should not be taken as scripture. Her statements served to calm investors somewhat, with market players were pricing in a 36% chance of a September hike and a 60% chance of a December hike as of end-August.

On the local front, Philippine assets saw buying interest as the country's fundamentals continued to stand out. The local 2Q16 GDP growth figure came in at +7.0% YoY, beating the consensus estimate of +6.6% YoY. Economic expansion was supported by steady OFW remittance inflows growing 3.0% YoY as of 1H16, while inflation remained manageable printing at just 1.9% for the month of July.

Fund Performance. The fund returned 0.29% for the month, missing its benchmark by 4 basis points. The fund underperforms its benchmark by 72 basis points on a year-to-date basis.

Fund Strategy. The Fund will continue to closely track the JPMorgan Asia Credit Total Return Index. Investors in a bond fund must be prepared to withstand volatility as higher investment value is typically achieved over the medium to long term.
